SUGARLOAF MOUNTAIN TRAILS

Sugarloaf Mountain is located east of Heber Springs on Highway 110E and sits behind the beautiful ASU-Heber Springs campus. Whether you choose a sunrise, a sunset or a sunny day, the view is sure to please you at the top of Sugarloaf Mountain. It's well worth the climb.

Brief History

In the fall of 2007, local citizens and ASU-Heber Springs personnel joined together to form the Sugarloaf Heritage Council to restore and enhance Sugarloaf Mountain in Heber Springs, Arkansas.

The mountain's graffiti-covered faces and deteriorated historic Summit Trail have been cleaned and restored since then through the efforts of many volunteers (both from the community and from the University). Grants, membership fees, sponsorships and ASU-Beebe have been a part of the funding of these projects.

Whats Next...

Sugarloaf Heritage Council is moving forward with the Master Plan to build a 1 mi. wildlife trail in the bottoms area west of Sugarloaf Mountain.(red trail on map) This trail will join the proposed 11 mile Sulphur Creek Trail heading west into Heber Springs.

Sulphur Creek Trail is a project of Greers Ferry Lake Trails Council and the City of Heber Springs.

Graffiti removal is always ongoing.

The Sugarloaf Heritage Council in partnership with ASU-Heber Springs have completed three trails.(see map below)

The Summit Trail (.66 mi. round trip) which leads you to the base of the summit is the most difficult to negotiate because it is quite steep. There are, however, rest areas along the way.

Summit Trail

Hidden Pond Trail

GFLTC Trail

Tonawonda Base Trail

The newest trail is the Tonawanda Base Trail, meandering (1.3 mi. long) around the base of the mountain. It is of moderate difficulty with some small hills and occasional uneven footing. Benches have been installed along the way.

- Wildlife Trail

The Hidden Pond Trail (.25 mi. to pond) is easy, being relatively flat and paved, with good footing and a picnic table near the pond. There is also a 90 foot wooden bridge with seating along the way.
